- Make proposals to Congress for changes in rules and procedures related to how TDs conduct ICCF tournaments, both to keep up with technological advances and simply to reflect solutions to newly discovered issues.
- Ensure that all approved ICCF adjudicators are instructed about proper adjudication procedures.

* Rule clarification procedure as determined by Congress 2015: The Chair of the Tournament Director Committee (TDC) and the Rules Commissioner (RC) are allowed to propose certain types of changes to existing ICCF documents and effectively make those changes once reviewed and approved by the Executive Board (EB) without specific prior Congress approval. The only types of changes either of these people are allowed to make are the following:

- when automation (through the server) has changed the procedure for accomplishing something as compared to how a (now outdated) segment of a document states the procedure should be accomplished;
- when any error is found in any ICCF document, as compared to what was intended at the time the entry was made;
- when the purpose is solely to clarify a portion of a document if a portion has been found to be insufficiently clear (that is, either being open to two different interpretations or lacking in detail in describing what is required); and
- when the purpose is to remedy a conflict between two documents, or segments of the same document (such conflicts most typically occurring when one document is updated and not all other documents were updated in concordance). When addressing such a conflict, the determination of which entry (between conflicting ones) to favor will be either (i) the newer entry (if it can be determined which entry is newer than the other(s)) or, if relative newness cannot be determined, then (ii) from a poll by the TDC Chair or RC of the Executive Board members that results in uniform agreement of everyone who responds to the poll within 2 weeks of its circulation. Without the fulfillment of either one of these options, any conflict of rules will still need to be resolved by the Congress and cannot be changed by the TDC Chair or RC.

Under no circumstance can either the TDC Chair or the RC make any change on his/her own to any existing document without the review and approval of the Executive Board, or where that change would constitute a new rule or procedure beyond the types listed above even with the review and approval of the Executive Board.

If and when the TDC Chair or the RC obtains the EB approval to make any change to any document, that official will inform everyone of relevance of the change. After that notification, the change will be considered in effect, without any Congress vote. Subsequent to that notification, anyone affected by the change who believes the change constitutes something beyond the above, such as being a new rule instead of simply a clarification, can file an appeal to the Appeals Committee (Other ICCF Rules) which will address the appeal in its usual manner.
